Join the Sold Down River team to hear about the initial findings of the project which is researching and identifying the victims of Virginia's coast-wise domestic slave trade to New Orleans and other southern ports.

Approximately 20,000 men women and children were sold from Virginia's ports to New Orleans, Savannah and other southern port cities to feed the growing demand for enslaved labor in cotton and sugar cane fields. We are finding their names and stories.

The Sold Down River Project has been generously supported by the Virginia African American Cultural Center.
