Norfolk State's Project

The Norfolk State University Urban and Community Demonstrations and Hands-on Training Farm Project represents Phase Two of this project, which provides students with hands-on experience in producing food using sustainable agriculture methods. This phase is centered on solar-powered deep well pumping and combines research and outreach to foster innovative, sustainable urban farming methods to improve ecological resilience and meet urgent food needs in the community. Students, faculty, staff, and community collaborators will help develop innovative solutions to impact the ecological sustainability of urban farming systems by building soil health and water conservation efforts and promoting beneficial insects.
